Selected for the Elkton Press.

THE NIGHT BLOOMING CEREUS.

The sunshine of summer, its breezes and showers
Had decked all the landscape with verdure and flowers,
Every hue to the eye did its brightness disclose,
From the lily's soft tint, to the blush of the rose.

The scene was resplendent, unrivalled its bloom,
Nor could blossom of Eden more sweetly perfume,
Every cautious flower did its beauties display,
And all nature was clad in her richest array.

Yet one virgin blossom all charming and bright,
Its loveliness modestly hid from the light,
Like a gem in a casket 'twas closely enshrined,
Avoiding the sun and the gaze of mankind.

But a moment 'tis destined to flourish on earth,
Brief emblem of excellence, virtue and worth,
And love too, which planted by destiny's hand,
Blooms but in seclusion, its shrine is the heart.

When the bright orb of day had retired to rest,
And the crimson tinged clouds disappeared from the west,
The night loving plant did its blossom unfold,
With the paleness of snow and the lustre of gold.

With a taper I stole through the gloom of the night,
And gazed on its delicate charms with delight;
But the chaste flower seemed conscious intrusion was near,
For I found every petal suffused with a tear.

Yes, tear-drops of dew did the blossom adorn,
And in beauty it wept till the splendour of morn.
When like loveliness drooping it hastily dies,
While its tears and its fragrance escape to the skies. EDGAR.

The Liverpool Mercury says the following lines are ascribed to the late General Washington.

The savage leaves his native shore,
Though rude the soil, and chill the air,
And well may Erin seem adore
The land that nature formed so fair.
What blood reflects a shore so sweet,
As S[illegible]oman, or pastoral Rann!
Or whom friend or foe can meet,
So generous as an Irishman?

His hand is rash, his heart is warm,
But principle is still his guide:
None more regrets a deed of harm,
And none forgives with nobler pride;
He may be duped, but won't be dared;
Fitter to practice than to plan,
He dearly earns a poor reward,
And spends it like an Irishman.

If poor or strange, for you he'll pay,
And guide you where you safe may be;
If you're a stranger, while you stay,
His cottage holds a jubilee;
His utmost soul he will unlock,
And if you may his secrets scan,
Your confidence he scorns to mock,
For faithful is an Irishman.

By honor bound in woe and weal,
What'er he says, he dares to do;
Try him with bribe, it won't prevail;
Put him to fire, you'll find him true,
He seeks no safety in his post,
What'er he may in honor's van;
And, if the field of fame be lost,
It won't be by an Irishman.

Erin! loved land! from age to age,
Be thou more blessed, more famed and free,
May peace be yours, and should you wage
Defensive wars, may victory!
May plenty seldom in every field,
And gentle breezes sweetly fan,
And generous souls for ever shield
The breast of every Irishman.

Physicians' bill.—It has been decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, that the right of physicians to priority of payment, by the laws of that state, for his whole bill for services rendered, whether in the last illness of person deceased, or otherwise, is valid.

First Annual Report of The Elkton Sunday School Union.

The first Anniversary of the Elkton Sunday School Union was celebrated on Friday the 4th day of July, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, at 11 o'clock, A. M. when an appropriate address delivered by the Rev. Solomon Sharp, from the words—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." He closed with a public examination of the children, after which the following report was presented and read by the Secretary:

REPORT.

This School was organized, the Constitution adopted and carried into full operation on the 19th day of July, 1827, and obtained from the Society the benefits arising from these schools, as they deem the eyes of the Christian public are open on this subject, but we think it worth remarking, when we contemplate the importance of Sabbath Schools to the rising generation, when we consider the simplicity of their design and organization, and the unwearied efforts of the many thousands who are employed in their management, we are astonished that an institution so valuable and promising so much hope, should have commenced its progress at so late a period in this place.

With these remarks your managers will proceed to lay before this society a brief notice of the present situation of this school. The managers, since its establishment have had one great difficulty to labor under, [illegible] something has been done towards the attainment of our object, yet, compar. [illegible] its importance, but little has been effected. It is therefore necessary to make new exertions for the coming year, in order our objects more extensively known, and to wake up the Christian community in our behalf. This is an institution which [illegible] will be a means of training up for the kingdom of glory, a company of immortal souls, which no man can number; and those who have not a part nor lot in this matter that we appeal, and respectfully invite their attention to the commands of our Saviour with Simon "Feed my Lambs," and last it was on this occasion when he put this question, we now in his name invite you to join and assist in the fulfilment of the charge, to enable us to act on this cause of Christ and of souls.

Your managers in taking a view of the funds of this school for the past year, are sorry to say, that they are smaller than they anticipated, or if we had not made use of our own funds in furnishing necessary books for the school, it certainly would have languished away, by this time, as the receipts of money received into the Treasury for the past year, would scarcely furnish this school with tracts for one quarter. Now permit us to ask the question: why have we not funds? Are we poor as a community? No; almost every branch of our industry is productive, and our profits increasing; can we not spare a mite in learning children the Holy Scriptures, and learning them to do unto others as others should do unto them.

The managers are of opinion, that the principal reason why we have not funds sufficient is, the public are not yet generally impressed with the utility of our enterprize. They do not fully consider the tendency of Sunday schools, as they do not only store the mind of youth with good moral principles, but form them to habits of order and subordination, and make them good members of society. What parent that loves virtue and values the immortal interest of his offspring, does not rejoice in having their names on these records, or what citizen will not join us or withhold his friendly aid, when he is assured that this institution is established to correct disorder—that by them neighborhoods are reformed—profanity, abuse of divine ordinances, and vice and immorality of every kind is diminished—that it is the duty of the teachers in this school to explain the Scriptures, enforce their requirements—to shew the depravity of human nature—the fearful consequences of sin, and lead their charge from Sabbath to Sabbath to the cross of a dying Saviour, therefore let the friends of God and of the Church awake to their obligations and duty, and join us in furthering the interest of this institution.

Your managers will now proceed to notice the progress of this school for the past year. The number of scholars enrolled is 61, who are divided into seven classes, one Bible, three Testament and three spelling classes, with teachers appointed to each class, and for the progress made by each class your manager will refer you to a statement made of them separately, at the close of this report, by which statement, they have recited 10,623 verses of scripture, 4,585 questions of Catechism, 630 Hymns, the ten commandments, and a number of scripture proofs, and the managers are induced from the faithfulness of the Superintendents and teachers, and the affection of the pupils, to expect that much good will result from their efforts to impart religious instruction to their mind.

Attached to this school is a department for the instruction of the people of colour; there are about 20 male scholars enrolled in this school, and in consequence of their not being regular in their attendance, and not having regular attending teachers, your managers are not able to give a correct account of their progress, but believe they are in a very flourishing state, as a number of them are reading in the Testament, and appear to be seriously affected from the instructions they have received.

The female department of this school, your managers are happy to say, has been better and more regularly attended, as the account received from their teachers is very pleasing and interesting to the pious heart, and your managers cannot do that justice to them better, than in giving the account as furnished by their worthy teachers, which is as follows: [illegible] of scholars at present on the [illegible] progress of our coloured [illegible] we cannot give as correct an [illegible] as we could wish, owing to the [illegible] they often change their [illegible] and sometimes leave school an [illegible] those who have continued constantly to attend school, have made considerable improvement in spelling and reading, and a [illegible] those who have removed, we hope and trust will not be altogether in vain, as some of them can read and have learned their catechism. We would in return with thankfulness to him who has the hearts of all in his hands—that some of our [illegible] are manifest conscientious [illegible] we have reason to believe, feel the meaning of what they say, when they repeat it in prayers and read a lesson—the choice that good part which shall not be taken away from them, and have connected themselves with the Methodist Church.

Your managers in offering their thanks to the superintendants and teachers for their punctual attendance and assiduous exertions in the discharge of their duty for the past year, would invite them in to redouble their [illegible] for the coming year. Although you [illegible] some attendance with success you will be [illegible] encouraged, for if faithful, they will be in vain, [illegible] will in due season reap an abundant harvest of unfading Glory [illegible] little labors of the [illegible] gathered in, though it may not be for many days.

It is the annual wish of the managers, that such suggestions may have to [illegible] effect, and that the hearts of Gentlemen may be stirred up to contribute [illegible] their means, and join with us [illegible] establishing the most [illegible] and highly important institution.

G. [illegible], Sec'ty.

Elkton, July 4, 1828.

The managers have requested the first Sunday in August next, as a public collection in the Churches, in aid of the encouragement of this institution. While we [illegible] to proceed in our charitable designs. We therefore [illegible] the confident hope, that the citizens of Elkton will not suffer their Sunday Schools to languish for want of funds, and have all who are [illegible] to this cause to come forward [illegible] with a liberal contribution, according to their influence, their prayers and their contributions, to aid us in the cause of Christ and of souls.

From the Troy Budget of Tuesday.

Cruelty and Suicide.—Almeretta Elwood, daughter of John Elwood, of the city, about 14 years of age, put an end to her life on Saturday evening, by taking a large draught of laudanum. The cause which induced her to destroy her life is one of a most cruel and aggravating nature, and calls loud for the just indignation of a civilized and an enlightened community. She did not escape the brutal severity of our own father. For a long time past, he has been in the habit of beating her, not with the ordinary weapons used by parents, but with a rope's end; an instrument, the use of which seldom know us, except on board of vessels of war. On the afternoon, and sunset of the last Sabbath, the deceased went a short distance from her father's house to see two female acquaintances. It was to a family which last year lived in a part of the house occupied by Elwood. On finding she had gone out, her father pursued her, ordered her home, and told her to be prepared, at 10 o'clock, for one of the severest floggings she had ever had." "I'll whip you," said he, "as long as I can, and leave breath in your body." The girl told a woman who lived in another part of the house, that "she should rather die than live, for she did not believe her punishment would be as great in another world as it was in this." Before 10 o'clock she had procured the laudanum and placed herself beyond the reach of a cruel and unnatural father. We are told by one of the women who assisted in laying her out, that marks of excessive cruelty were plainly discovered about her person, and several spots appeared as if a large knot in a rope had caused them. It is also said, that those bruises must have been made a week before, as her father had not beaten her since the previous Sabbath.

We have heard of none who pretend to charge the deceased with bad conduct of any kind. Her neighbors speak highly in favor of her. But the treatment which she received at the hand of her father, we rejoice to believe, is as uncommon as it is outrageous. The case will create sufficient excitement without further remark, and we shall therefore forbear.

A fisherman's hut, on the Jersey shore of the Delaware, below Keighn's Point, was struck by lightning on Sunday afternoon. A black man who was in it, was instantaneously killed and two white men were stunned. The suspender buckle of one of the white men, and two half dollar pieces in the pocket of his vest, were melted by the lightning. He is now able to attend to his business.—[Philad. Gaz.

The London Sunday Times of the 18th May, mentions that Lord Encombe, son of Lord Eldon, lately lost, with the Marquis of Hertford, from 20 to 25,000 pounds at gambling.

[illegible] of Macon, as agent of [illegible] in Savannah, bought a lot for similar purposes.

Cure for the Fever and Ague.—A writer in the Charleston Mercury recommends the following prescription for the cure of Ague: Take a cup of very strong coffee mixed with a small quantity of lemon juice, the dose to be taken just before the fit of Ague is expected. A single dose had cured an acquaintance of the writer, who had nearly forgotten it when he came across a review of "Dr. Foster's Travels in the Morea" which contained the following paragraph:

"I have often seen intermitting fevers subdued entirely by a mixture of coffee and lemon-juice, which is the general remedy for them, all over the country. The proportions are three quarters of an ounce of coffee ground very fine—two ounces of lemon juice, and three of water. The mixture to be drunk warm and fasting."

Sisters and Mothers.

These ar[illegible], who[illegible], like the invisible strings of conscience, bind man to the world of [illegible] [illegible] the last [illegible] forgotten when one leaves life. The married sister may be one of purer and more uninterrupted felicity—there may be no cloud in its whole happy horizon; it may be ever sunny, and flowers spring up in every season of the age. But even these happy ones, who are in this clime of bliss, remembered long and late the claims of a sister or a mother to their best affections. In one life of the solitary and single, those who are said to be doomed to an ennui of loneliness the claims of a sister and a mother should hold strongly, not only upon their feelings, but duties. Those kindnesses which men bestow upon their offspring and their wives, and who possess each, and in whom their best views are concentrated, in the bachelor, are given to an (almost) sacred name which constitutes this bonding. In loving a sister, there is none of that earthliness of passion, which degrades the heart—in the devotion due to a mother, comes one of the selfishness of man.—The feelings inspired by both sister and mother, are derived from sources as pure as the Divinity which inspires them.

It might be a singular speculation to enquire how many of the various matches which have been made, have proved happy: how many who have been connected by wedlock, now mark the day of that connexion as blessed—and how many now would [illegible] years of joy if the vow irrevocable could at this hour be utterly cancelled. Yet aside from this speculation, all, whether single or married ladies, all, whether male or married are mindful of the duties and affections due to the sister or mother. When the wife is forgotten the mother is remembered, and why? she has been our long and constant friend. Our errors she has viewed with leniency, our sins corrected with tears, and our virtues remembered and rewarded by her smiles. The attractions which a sister possesses, are of a similar nature, and from similar causes. Few wish ever to sever that chain of affection which binds him in its maternal or fraternal wreath of flowers, while full of he is apt to feel those of matrimony, hang heavily on his shoulders.—We speak not experimentally on the subject, but derive the fact from observation, gathered from the sour looks, snappish retorts, and discontented grimaces, exhibited by the most loving of the married, at various times and seasons. So far convinced are we of this truth, that sometimes the roses of matrimony become withered after the expiration of the honeymoon, and their thorns become grievous to the wearers of the wreath, that we would wish no more profitable employment, than to have the exclusive right for the United States, to unmarry all those who mutually desired it, for sixpence a pair for five years. Our hall of justice would be thronged, our exchequer become filled, and the national debt soon be come extinguished by a tax upon our profits of one per cent. More smiling faces would be seen as our clients departed from our anti-Gretna Green, than were evident when the parties returned from the altar where the knot was tied, and full as much real satis-

To th powder.—The following is a recipe for making a cheap and innocent, tooth-powder, celebrated for its efficacy, which not only whitens the teeth white, but also [illegible] [illegible] and at a [illegible] could [illegible] to the breath.—Take the [illegible] of gum myrrh, one ounce of [illegible] [illegible] cent. The [illegible] the better, when [illegible] for immediate use; and we [illegible] that of all [illegible] for [illegible] the [illegible] ever used, this is the best.—[Journal des.

Pea Whistles and Beans.—The [illegible] boys are now [illegible] this kind of [illegible]. It will be a source [illegible] be used by as trade-men. Take the North River for instance. Thirteen boats between Albany and New York, consume, it is said, 1,000 cords per week, the ferry boats about fourteen hundred more.—The consumption on the North River alone is put at more than three thousand cords a week, or nearly at least 150,000 cords of wood in eight months, worth 450,000 dollars. The Sound Boats, also, burn their proportion, perhaps one fourth as much. In one trip [illegible] [illegible] consumed by one of the sound boats. Where is the fuel to come from many years hence?—Coal must be substituted, or we shall have a general cleaning in the Northern and middle States.

Scriptural use of the word Forty.—This numerical, which occurs so frequently, in such places where its introduction is manifest at variance with reason as that precede and follow it, is in the East constantly used as a round term, meaning, "many," or any definite number, as we use the words "score" and "dozen or two." The ruined palace at Persepolis is called "Chehul ar," or the "forty pillars" though it has but nineteen standing and, when perfect, had two hundred and six. The Arabs also use one thousand and one in a similar manner. Thus Moses was in the mount "forty days," meaning many days. The Israelites lived many, not "forty" years in the Wilderness. This meaning explains numerous difficulties in scripture history, and Persians, Arabs, and Turks still use the term "forty" in this sense.

Commercially Important. The New-York Gazette has been favored with a copy of the official Gazette of Martinique of the 11th of June, which contains a Royal ordinance abolishing the 12 per cent. export duty heretofore paid by foreign vessels trading to that island. This measure will doubtless be the means of extending our trade in that quarter.

The New-Brunswick Courier states that on Sunday of last week, as a boat, with twelve persons was returning to Long Reach from Oak Point, where they had been to attend divine service, it shipped a sea near the shore and went down, and, painful to relate, ten persons out of the twelve perished.

[From the Quebec Star.]

The following anecdote of the accomplished General Wolfe deserves well to be remembered: "The late professor Robinson, of Edinburgh, at that time a midshipman in the royal navy, happened to be on duty in the boat in which General Wolfe went to visit some of the posts the night before the decisive battle of Quebec. The evening was fine, and serene, considering the work they were engaged in, and the morning to which they were looking forward, was sufficiently impressive. As they rowed along, the General, with much feeling, repeated nearly the whole of Gray's Elegy, which had recently appeared and yet was but little known, to an officer who sat with him at the stern of the boat, adding, as he concluded, that he would prefer being the author of that poem to the glory of beating the French to-morrow. To-morrow came, and the life of the illustrious soldier was gloriously terminated amidst the tears of his friends and the shouts of his victorious army."

Camp-Meeting.—A [illegible] says that a [illegible] Camp, by one method [illegible] Vermont, on the 3d of June, for the first time in twenty three years. This was a real Camp-Meeting.
